An Indignant Dentist.

Mr. Dispatch: I saw a notice in your paper to-day, taken from the Cincinnati Commercial, stating that some one intends exhibiting at the Centennial an excruciating set of false teeth (worn by Washington) in contrast with the best dental work of New York.

How and when were the aforesaid teeth obtained? They may, indeed, have been worn by some Washington Squibbs, of Yankeeedom, but we must have good evidence to believe that the great George Washington, of Virginia, with his fine pharynx, should wear such a set. And we would say to this dental peddler, who, doubtless, is a "youth to fortune and to fame unknown," that very much of New York dentistry compares poorly by the side of that done by even the dental students of this city. While our hand is in it let us say that we are willing to pit some of our dentists against the world. They can insert a plug which will stand over a hundred years after the tooth drops out. JASON.

Washington doth wear false teeth at one period of his life.

The Potato (or Colorado) Bug.

This destructive insect is making its appearance, and the farmers are becoming very much alarmed at the prospect of suffering from the ravages of a correspondent of the New York Tribune says: "My fields have been troubled with these pests for the past six years, and the best and most expeditious remedy I have ever found was to catch the old ones when they made their appearance on the vines, and to burn them as soon as they appeared. The potato-vines are out of the ground. Last season I caught fifty-four from a patch two rods square, some of the hills not being up yet. The bugs are in the earth, and come to the surface as soon as the vines open. One of these bugs, I showed to a young man, that deprecated its showing a large patch of potatoes. In looking for bugs keep your eye out, also, for the eggs on the under side of the leaves. By a little attention to the catching of the old bugs, the start of a man can save a great deal of trouble, for as soon as the bugs hatch they are hard to get rid of."

The insects have ceased to cause much fear from them at the West, where they originated, the use of the Paris green, and prompt attention to its use, have found the surest way to add the only remedy to counteract their operations. Apply the Paris green mixed with plaster or flour in the proportion of one part of the pure green to forty or fifty of the plaster, and dust it over the vines by means of a box with a perforated top, and a long nozzle attached, so that the application may be made without danger of inhaling the dust. Another plan is to mix the Paris green with water and apply with a watering can or similar vessel. The powder is not soluble, and the mixture has to be kept agitated. This is the best and most convenient and safe plan to apply the poison.

The Evil of Silver Currency.

DESPERATE ADVENTURE OF A WELL-KNOWN SOCIETY GENTLEMAN.

Mr. George W. Fackler, the popular agent of the Cincinnati Mutual Life Insurance Company, is tired of silver currency. And he has reason to be. Mr. Fackler, Secretary of the company, has been a ride in the country, and chose Kentucky for his recreation. He crossed the Suspension bridge drinking in the beauties of the river, was admired by the little descendants of Daniel Boone and relatives of General Grant as he ambled through Covington, and felt his charge and pleasure. He spurred his charger and cleared out the Latonia pike. In the dark of evening he turned his horse's head toward Ohio and soon came to the toll-gate on the road into South Covington.

A woman put out her fair hand for the toll, and Mr. Fackler, with his usual chivalry, and dropped into the outstretched rose palm a half dollar of virgin silver, fresh from his pocket.

The maiden eyed the coin for a moment, and then passed it back, saying, softly, as she bowed to the gallant horseman, while a blush mantled in her cheeks:

"You can't come none of yer dog-goned gams over me, Mister. I want real money."

"But," remonstrated Mr. Fackler, "that is silver, pure as your thoughts, gentle as your good, and as good as gold."

"Well, yer can't get by here on no such stuff as that, yer bet yer bottom dollar," and the pole venter down, and Mr. Fackler was banished from his native land.

He felt in all his pockets, and could find nothing beside big pockets full of silver except checks and notes. It was desperate, and he pleaded with the obdurate maiden long and earnestly. He gave her his card. He offered to leave his blue silk handkerchief with her; he represented the terror-stricken condition of his wife and children, and he begged her to let him settle upon that distracted household, and he returned not. He offered his photograph in Continental costume, a pin-bag, a box of hair-pins, a breast-pin, a cask of scented soap; but she was faithful to her trust, and finally Mr. Fackler dismounted and sat down like a soldier in despair.

To the great relief of his despairing friends, and the disappointment of his coronal party and the disgust of the obdurate writers, Mr. Fackler appeared travel-stained and all hands were happy. He said, in answer to the anxious questions of the horse, "I have left the situation was desperate, and recalling some of his old days when he started out in the insurance business, he commenced to talk to the woman at precisely 8 o'clock, and at just 10 o'clock she gave in and gently breathed her last, and he slipped under the pole and wended his way home."

The above is a romance founded on fact.—Cincinnati Times, 8th.

AN ECCENTRIC CLERGYMAN.—An eccentric clergyman died in England recently, the following account of his life is given in the London News: "The Rev. G. W. Manning, rector of St. Petronius, near Padstow, died suddenly on the 27th of April. When the Owston Ferry tombstone case was decided, the deceased advertised that he should answer no letters addressed to him with the necessary initials. He was given the request by his correspondents to place after his name the initials of parish priest. Latterly Mr. Manning has exhibited many eccentricities. For some time he has slept with his coffin under his bed, and for the last fortnight has taken his night's rest in the coffin, which he has placed in the parsonage, to make it more comfortable. Around the walls of his room was placed the angry correspondence his advertisement evoked, and there was a direction that in case of sudden illness a doctor from Padstow should be brought, and if he could do no good, one from Wadebridge, and that was of small avail, 'the Lord's will be done.'"
